A Specession of Brilliant Social Leaders-The Republican Court at the Mational Capital.

[Boston Herald.] It is a very striking and suggestive fact in the social history of this country that many of the wives of our popularly-elected Presidents have possessed social accom-plishments and graces which might well plishments and graces which might well bent the hereditary princesses of royal courts. Indeed, it is very rarely that the royal court of any European country has been presided over by such an almost constant succession of elegant and brilliant women as those who have been called upon to dispense the hospitalities of the White House. If we look at the history of the Ergilsh court, for instance, we have to go back more than two centuries to find a Queen conspicuous for beauty and social talents. Yet, within the period of a century, our republican court has been adorned by a number of women who have been distinents. Yet, within the period of a century, our republican court has been adorned by a number of women who have been distinguished by attractive personal and social qualities. While, during that century, the leadership of the English court has been held by the homely and quite inelegant Queen Charlette, the prossic and retiring Queen Adelaide, and the haughty, heavy, domestic Queen Victoria, that of our presidential mansion has been occupied by Mrs. Washington and Mrs. John Adams, Mrs. Madison and Mrs. John Adams, Mrs. Madison and Mrs. John Chine, and Mrs. Hayes. President Clevelind's wedding, and the consequent installation of a new matress of the White House, suggest the marital status of our Presidents. Washington, John Adams, Madison, Monroe, J. Q. Adams, Harrison, Polk, Taylor, the marital status of our Presidents. Washington, John Adams, Madison, Monroe, J. Q. Adams, Harrison, Polk, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Linealn, Grant, Hayes, and Garfield were married men during their presidential terms. The Presidents who were widowers when they held the office were Jefferson, Jackson, Van Buren, and Arthur. Tyler was a widower when he succeeded to the presidency, but married Miss Julia Gardiner in New York during his term of office. Buchanan and Cleveland were the only bachelors who have occreded the Chirf Executive chair, and now Cleveland's marriage leaves. "Old Buck," as the softery bachelor on the presidential roll. Of the wives of the married presidents, Mrs. Harrison, Mrs. Fillmore, and Mrs. Pierce were invalide during the period that they fived in the White House; were seen little or none at all by the society which frequented it, and do not appear prominently in the social annals of their day.

The capital of the United States in the carlier years of Washington's presidency was New York; and siter his inauguration he and his family occupied a nouse at the corner of what is now Cherry street and Franklin square. They afterward removed to Broadway, not lar from the Bowling Green. Washington drove about New York in a cream-colored coach, decorated with frescoed cupids bearing festoons of flowers, and drawn by six horses. Mrs. Washington held her receptions on Friday evenlogs from 7 to 10. These receptions were very select and exclusive. In those times it was not regarded as a necessary homage to Republican institutions to admit all the world in a crowding thronx to presidential receptions. The efficience of the Washington's levees was not very burdensome, but such as it was it was rigidity exacted. It was always necessary to appear in full dress, and the presentations to the President and his lady were made with courtly formality. Refreshments, which in the main were restricted to the simplicity of tea or coffee and cake, were served at the levees by liveried shaves. Mrs. Washington was very resolute in closing her levees promptly at 10 o'clock. "General Washington," she once remarked to her guests, with a quiet dignity all her own, "retures at 10 o'clock, and I usually precede him." It is agreed by all the writers of the Washington period—even by those of the Washington period—even by the period period her guests, with a quiet dignity all her own, "retures at 10 o'clock, and I usually precede him." It is agreed by all the writers of the Washington period—even by those who were politically most hostile to the "chief"—that nothing could exceed the dignity, grace, and quiet, stately good humor with which his wife presided over his household and dispensed his hospitalities. A noted beauty in Virginia in her youth, he was undoubtedly still tine-lock. she was undoubtedly still fine-locking, with a distinguished air, warn, as an elderly matron, she held the place of the first lady in the land. She was a little below medium beight, of full figure, with a stately carriage, quiet and undemon-strative manners, and an amiable expres-sion of countenance. While she was not noted for brilliant conversational powers, she talked well and held her own in distinguished companies, which contained men like Hamilton, Jay, the Livingstons, Jef-ferson, and Robert Morris, and the brilliant female leaders of the high New York and afterward Philadelphia society. THERE WAS A VERY MARKED CONTRAST afterward Philadelphia society.

THERE WAS A VERY MARKED CONTRAST between Mrs. Washington, the stately, aristocratic dame from Virginia, and the New England country parson's daughter who succeeded her on the social throne of the republic. Abigail Adams, however, enjoys a still surviving fame, only second to that of Martha Washington herself. Her letters are still read with interest and delight by all who like to linger on the early annais of our history as a poople. She was a model of substantial, shrewd Yankee sense. She was not a woman of remarkable learning, but her mind was naturally quick and observant, and she had lived in European courts as the wife of the Minister of the young United States. As has been well said of Abigail Adams, she was "an accomplished woman, a pare-hearted patriot, and a worthy partner of her husband's cares and honors. In her elevated position her grace and elegance, with her charms of conversation, were rendered more attractive by her frank sincerity." Her keen powers of observation and her clear judgment gave her great personal influence over men and affairs. Her cheerfulness and affectionate sympathy sustained President Adams's spirit, and "it was her part in life to calm agitations, healthe ranking wounds of pride and pluck away the root of bitterness." nds of pride and pluck away the ing wounds of pride and pluck away the root of bitterness."

It was in the last year of President Adams's term of office that the seat of our Government was removed from Philadelphia to Washington, and Abigail Adams was the first President's wife to hold levees on the banks of the Potomae. Perhaps the most vivid picture of Washington as it was in its metropolitan inflavey is to be found in Mrs. Adams's own letters, for she was a very delightful as well as a very prolife letter-writer. She speaks of the new presidential mansion as "on a grand and superb scale, requiring about thirty servants to attend and keep the snartments in proper order and perform the ordinary business of the house and stables. The lighting the apartments from the kitchen to perfors and chambers is a tax indeed, and the fires we are obliged to keep to secure us from daily agues are another very cure us from daily agues are another very ebeering comfort."

One who knew and often saw Abigail Adams thus graphically described her: "Her lefty lineaments carried a trace of the Puritan severity. They were those of the himeted Minerva, and not of the ces-ture indeed venus. She was a dilactic the helmeted Minerva, and not of the cos-tus-girdled Venus. She was a didactic personage, a little inclined to assume a ser-monizing attitude, and a little inclined, after the custom of her people, to return thanks that she had no lot or part in any-thing that was not of Massachusetts. But towering above and obscuring these minor angularities, she possessed a rare strength of intellectual and moral character. When her New England frigidity gave way and kindled into enthusiasm, it was not like light straw on fire, but red-hot steel."

whoever presided over the hospitalities of the Executive Mansion was Mrs. Madison. or, as she was endearingly called by her generation, "Dolly " Madison. Her social reign in Washington, indeed, virtually covered a period of sixteen years. Jefferson was a widower, and during his term of eight years his daughters were seldom seen at the capital. The hospitalities of his house were pretty much confined to levees, to which the whole public were for the first time induscriminately admitted. The real centre of official hospitality was at the house of Mr. Madison, who was Jefferson's Secretary of State during the entire eight years. Then followed Madison's eight years. Then followed Madison's eight years. Then followed Madison's eight years the first series of president, during which his stately and gracious wife continued to make his residence the seene of splendid assemblies, of bountoous welcome and gay BY PAR THE MOST BRILLIANT TYOMAN JUST ARRIVED AN INVOICE OF EXTRA-FINE COLONG, and GUN POWDER TEAS. social gatherings. No queen born to the purple by ten centuries of royal descent could have borne with greater case, tact, and graceful dignity the burden of social leadership than did Dolly Madison. Her figure stands out magnificently, with her great Parisian turban, her full, straight form, her pleasant, winning smile, her sparkling and always kind talk, her abounding good nature and genial manner, and quite casts in the background her small, slight, pale-faced, tactum President husband. So frunk and coratal was she that she disarmed the rancor of her husband's fiercest political foes, who flocked willingly to her sumptious dinners, which were in the ample Virginian style. At the inauguration ball of her lushand bolly Madison easily carried away the palm by her imposing appearance. She wore buff-colored velvel, with pearl ornaments, and a Paris turban with bird-of-paradise plume." When duly installed in the Executive Mansion she gave weekly dinner parties and frequent receptions. She abolished much of the ceremony and etiquette which Mrs. Washington had made the fashion, being resolved that everybody who came to enjoy her hospitalities should have "a good time." "Her memory was so good." writes one of her contemporaries, "that she never forgot a name, and could address each of her guests, though just introduced with twenty others, as if she had known them for years. She was a magnificent-looking woman in the drawing-room. Her stately and Juno-like figure towered above the rest of the ladies. When she found a timid young girl she would altend to her most assiduously, conduct her to the piano, and remain with her until she became more at ease." Mrs. Madison was a real heroine. When the British invaded Washington and approached the President's house, Mrs. Madison refused to star a step out of it until she was assured that her husband had got across safely into Vurginia. Of Mrs. Monroe, the wife of that President who was called "the last of the cocked hats," because he was the last to wear the old continental cos

CLIFTON FORGE, VA., June 1, 1886.
The Masonic fraternity of Clifton Focge, assisted by the Covington lodge of Masons, laid the corner-stone of the new Masonic hall here to-day. Colonel Peyton S. Coles, grand lecturer, was present and conducted the ceremonies. There was a large number of people present, and the ceremonies were interesting and impressive. The oration was delivered by Rev. William E. Hill. Dinner was served upon the ground. To-night a ball is going on under a large arbor erected for the occasion. Altogether the day has been a memorable one in the history of Clifton Forge, The Masonic lodge here is in a flourishing condition, having nearly one hundred members, many of whom are "bright" in the mystic art.
Clifton Forge, notwithstanding the alleged hard times, continues to improve. A bridge is likely to be built at an early day across the river at this point, which will add no little to the business and convenience of the place and community. Alleghany county seems to be awakening to the importance of building bridges, and at a recent meeting of the trustees it was decided to build four bridges at suitable places seross the Jackson river.

Perhaps there is no county in the State whose revenue is greater than Alleghany, which is due to its having such magnificent enterprises as Low Moor and Longdale, not to mention from Mountain and Stack mimes, which are owned and operated by Mr. Frank Lyman, of New York.

I suffered the most agonizing pains in my bones, and was covered with sores all over my body and limbs. I had vertigo and deafness, with partial loss of sight, severe pains in my head and eyes, etc., which nearly ran me crazy. I lost all hope in that country and sailed for America, and was treated at Roosevelt, in this city, as well as by a prominent physician in New York having no connection with the hospitals.
